

Dana Days: Family counselor Dana Cohen has been busy. The Day of Enlightenment that brings family members into a patient's treatment and recovery process is now running twice a week. She spoke with Bensalem's Joseph DiGirolamo on his Mornings with the Mayor cable program (above); also on WURD-AM's recovery-themed program, Cohen was interviewed by behavioral counselor Fred Barber (right). Dana visited with youngsters studying today's issues at Leverington Elementary in the Roxborough section of Philadelphia (arranged through the community education agency Need In Deed.) Then she visited Penn State University at Abington to talk to students about medical ethics.

Nurse Manager Donna Walter conducted a session with dozens of nurses at Aria Health's training center off Woodhaven Road. She shared protocols and insight on treating trauma patients affected (as they so often are) by addiction. Then family counselor Dana Cohen took over, to educate the nurses on how they can best relate to and serve the families of trauma patients, and elicit the information that will help the medical decision-making. They'll repeat their seminar in April, and possibly again in the fall.
